Capital and Labor

About thirty years ago I had a debate with college students on the question, "Resolved, that the laboring men of the United States, including farmers and mechanics, oppress themselves more than capitalists oppress them."

The boys threw up their hats when I agreed to take the affirmative of the question. After a week of preparation they took my best debater after we were in the hall ready for the debate, and after I had given him special instructions for my benefit. He turned traitor and helped the other side, and then the affirmative won the debate.

Say, I will debate this question with any man in this United States, at any place, if my expenses are paid going to and from the debate: "Resolved, That we, the laboring men, are the power that moves the world, and we could make and enforce any laws we choose, if we would be honest with ourselves, our families and our God, and then hang together." But, this little word and its twin, If, are the two largest words in the English language, and have the most to do with the destinies of men. The two old parties are satisfied when they can keep us divided, and the party that gets enough of us to give it a majority is happy.

But I attended my first political meeting at the first election of Abe Lincoln, and I know the only way the republican party ever elected Old Abe was by having help from the best men, those of principle from all parties. Capital is labor's best friend. Why kill it? Labor is capital's best friend. Why kill it? I am like the Irishman who said that he believed that the rich should divide with the poor. A rich man standing by said: "Pat, if I should give you half of my money, you would drink it up and fool it away. Then what would you do?" Pat replied: "I would have you divide again."

Now I believe that capital and labor should divide the profits. I believe that each should have his just dues. I have been a farmer and laborer as a farm hand for over fifty years, and have hired several men at a time erecting large buildings, and I believe the best plan in sight at present is a board of control or arbitration in each state to settle difficulties, and help establish just wages, a board of control similar to the board that looks after our state institutions. I would like to see it tried, anyway.

Mr. Goodfellow—A Call for Charity

We have in our midst, just a little ways from town, a charity case, which I have investigated and believe to be deserving—a man, sick and unable to work, with a wife and five children. These children need clothing and shoes, and I will give you the list of approximate sizes which will answer their needs: No. 3 girl's shoes, No. 2 girl's shoes, No. 13 boy's shoes, No. 9 girl's shoes, No. 6 ladies' shoes, and clothing to suit same size children. Perhaps you have some good things to eat that would gladden the hearts of these children. If you will bring what you care to donate to assist this family, whom I know are in immediate need, to Fason's Drug Store not later than Friday noon, and I will personally see that they are delivered to these people. Remember the three graces—faith, hope and charity—and the greatest of these is charity.

Respectfully,

F. H. RILEY.

Christmas Greetings

It is very pleasant for us to think of Christmas—the strange happenings occurring on the evening before Christmas; while we were at the Baptist church looking at pictures representing the birth of our Lord, which were very suggestive, good old Santa, in company with good friends, came to our front door and stacked boxes so we could not go in till they were moved. They were well filled with good things, ham and sausage and different meats and groceries; so, Mr. Grocerman, you will have to excuse us for a while. Happy New Year to all.—J. M. England and Wife.

Killed in Kansas

Wichita, Kas., Dec. 29 B. W. A. Henson, 60 years old, formerly of Englewood, Kas., shot and killed his wife here this morning while she was combing her hair. Using his shot gun as a club, he beat to death his 18-year old stepson, Walter Shafer, who went to the aid of his mother. Shafer suffered from partial paralysis. Neighbors attracted to the scene saw the youth killed. Henson fled from the house and boarded a street car. He was followed and taken from the car in the suburbs of the city. He declares his wife and stepson were threatening to kill him and that he committed the murder in self defense.

The murdered woman, formerly Mrs. Busby, and her son were well known here, having formerly lived in Wright county, on the Mansfield Hartville road.

Mansfield's Fame Spreads

The Scientific American of New York contained, in a recent issue, an illustrated write up of the Boys' Good Roads Club of Mansfield, organized by Dr. F. H. Riley. The first mention of this club, the fame of which is now nation-wide, appeared in the Mansfield Mirror. The pictures from which the illustrations used in the article were made were taken by L. Leatherman, of the Mansfield Art Studio.

Macomb for Road District

Macomb showed its progressive spirit Monday by voting 37 to 28 to organize a special road district, to be known as No. 25, with A. V. Freeman, Al King and W. H. Brake as commissioners. This completes a chain of special road districts through Wright county. It will help materially the cause of good roads and improve our prospects of securing the official Ozark Trail.

Watermelons for Christmas

The Mirror editor received one Christmas present that was not duplicated by anyone else, and that was a watermelon from W. O. Williams. Watermelons at Christmas time are certainly a novelty, but W. O. says it's easy to raise them if you know how.
